Dark clouds begin to gather.
They get darker and darker.
A storm is coming.

Tim and Pam run into the house.
The strong winds begin to blow.

Strong winds begin to blow,
and the sky gets darker.

The sky gets darker,
and the clouds move over the house.

The clouds move over the house,
and lightning flashes all around.

Lightning flashes all around,
and thunder crashes loudly.

Thunder crashes loudly,
and the rain begins to fall.

The rain falls,
and the winds blow wildly.

Then the rain stops falling,
and the winds stop blowing.

The Sun comes out.
Tim and Pam come out, too.

Nothing for Father's Day

Written by Melanie Alberts
Illustrated by Margaret Sanfilippo

My dad wants nothing for Father's Day.
"Nothing at all?" I asked.
"Not a thing," said Dad.

Last year I gave him a funny tie.
It made everyone laugh.
Dad says he has enough ties.

Last year my sister gave him a hat.
It made him look like a big rabbit.
Dad says he has enough hats.

Last year my brother gave him socks.
Dad wore them once.
I think Dad has enough socks.

Last year Mom gave him a computer game.
It made his computer crash.
Dad said, “Enough computer games!”

This year, Dad wants to watch TV.
He wants to take it easy and play.

He wants nothing, but we have a plan.
We will watch TV.
We will play.

And we will give him the biggest hug
just for Father's Day.
